

MIA BULJAN: I never had those conversations with my kids. I try to have them more now, like, this matters because next year I want you to be thinking to yourself, "I know that I could do this even...because I know that I did it before," or "I remember what it was like when it was hard and I remember that I could do it because someone stuck with me." And that idea that you have to find the people who will support you even if it's not your next year's teacher, which I hope they all get, but if they don't that they can find those supports in other places. And I think I got that from Patty in spades watching the videos.
